

How I Teach It

TUESDAY, MARCH 19, 2024

2:00PM

ALUMNI GALLERY- WT YOUNG LIBRARY

In this series we celebrate and discuss the ways that scholars around campus teach complex gender and women's studies concepts like feminisms, gender, sex, and intersectionality among others. A 30-45 minute discussion/presentation of pedagogies, challenges and controversies by the scholar is followed by a Q&A with the audience. After which we will celebrate with light refreshments.

"Teaching Intersectionality: Highlighting the Strategies and Stories of International Graduate Instructors"

Lukas Bullock is a fourth year PhD candidate in GWS who researches state feminism and epistemic politics. Lukas has taught courses covering feminist social movements and gender and pop culture.

Shruthi Parthasarathy is a fourth-year graduate student at the Department of Gender & Women's Studies, University of Kentucky. Her research interest lies in understanding the intersections of caste and masculinity in varied contexts and is currently working on her project on priestly masculinities in the diaspora.

Jingxue Zhang (she/they) is a Ph.D. Candidate from the Department of Gender & Women's Studies. Her ongoing doctoral research projects examines the interplay between motherhood, affect, and transnational migration. She has taught "Gender and Popular Culture" and "Sex and Power."

Sponsored by the Department of Gender & Women's Studies